

No Bully All staff workshop

This three-hour workshop offers schools an easy first step to becoming bully-free. Bring together all the teachers, staff and volunteers that work at your school to create a common language around bullying and to mobilize their commitment to address it.

In this workshop, participants:

- Learn to recognize the many faces of bullying (physical, verbal, relational and cyber) and how bullying leads to harassment.
- Deepen their awareness of the developmental issues that cause bullying to intensify in late childhood and early adolescence and the diversity issues of race, class and non-compliance with gender roles that so often underpin these behaviors.
- Develop skills through small group discussion, scenarios and role-plays in how to intervene to stop verbal harassment and bullying.

No Bully is a respected San Francisco-based 501(c)(3) non-profit with the mission of making schools bully-free. No Bully has brought this three-hour workshop to thousands of school staff and teachers across California. It's a great way to establish a unified approach at your school to bullying and to give all the adults who work on campus the skills to respond.

Can you afford an anti-bullying workshop?

Student bullying creates an unsafe learning environment, wastes administrator and teacher time, reduces revenue through suspensions, absences, and students withdrawn from school, marginalizes diverse youth, brings the risk of litigation and contributes to scholastic failure.

Many schools pay for this workshop through Title II Federal funding (professional development). The real question, though, is whether your school can afford not to address bullying.
